I. Seven sentences have been removed from the text below. Choose from the sentences A-H the one which best fits each gap. There is one extra contenes which

- A As well as food, animals need somewhere to live.
- B Animals can't talk but some species have developed ways of letting others know where food is.
- C Each individual in the group contributes something that helps the others.
- D Hunting can be difficult and even dangerous for one animal.
- E Some species have developed intelligent ways of gathering food.
- F It is not always easy for animals to build a home.
- G Animals also depend on each other to keep safe.
- H For similar reasons, animals also use teamwork.

People work together for a simple reason - it makes difficult jobs easier. If you had to move a heavy piece of furniture from one room to another, would you do it all by yourself or find someone to help you? As you would probably agree, with a friend you can get the job done more quickly, and neither of you will be as tired afterwards. 1 In animal groups, each individual works to help the group as a whole.

Coastal bottlenose dolphins have developed a unique way of catching fish which requires extraordinary teamwork. The dolphins follow a school of fish until they are near a bank. Then, they swim towards the fish creating a wave which pushes the fish out of the water and onto the bank. The dolphins end up half out of the water lying on the bank where they eat the helpless fish. In order for this to work, each dolphin must rush towards the bank at exactly the same time, otherwise the wave won't be strong enough. How they decide when to go and who gives the order is unknown, but a high level of communication definitely exists between them.

For example, if a bee finds nectar, it has two ways of informing its hive. It may create a trail with the scent of the nectar. When the other bees pick up the smell, they can follow it to the nectar. Or the bee may perform movements in a figure-eight and shake its body. The other bees understand what these movements mean, and then they work as a team to collect the nectar.

4 It also takes a lot of energy to chase and kill prey, which is wasted if the prey escapes. Hunting in packs helps make predators more efficient. A pack of wolves, for example, can kill a large animal such as a deer or moose, while one wolf can only kill a small animal. Wolf packs, which consist of two to twenty wolves, may surprise their prey or pursue it for hours before attacking. If there are several animals, the pack will choose the weakest one because it will take less effort to catch. In the end, the wolves share the meat with each other.

MAKE LIGHT WORK

5 Some animals simply move into the best place they can find, but others build a home for themselves. A particularly intelligent builder is the beaver. Beavers live by rivers and streams and build dams to create pools of deep water which help keep their homes safe. The whole colony, about five to six members, co-operates to create the dam with trees they've cut down using their long, sharp front teeth. They then construct their home, which looks like a stick igloo, in the side of the bank.

6 For example, they might have a signal that lets the group know when a threat is nearby. When an ant is crushed, it releases a scent called 'alarm pheromone' that signals the other ants to come to the crushed ant and attack the enemy. Larger animals may challenge an opponent using sounds and body language. Wolves, for example, will growl at anything that is threatening their pack, and get ready to attack. They also warn each other of danger by barking. Because their pack is so important to their survival, wolves will even risk their lives to defend it.

By living and working in groups, animals increase their chances of surviving in the wild. (7) This could be as simple as communicating where food is. Or it could be as difficult and dangerous as risking one's life to protect another member of the group. By studying a variety of animal groups, one thing is for sure: teamwork works!

Are You Motivated for Success

Psychologists have been coming up with lots of different theories about motivation. They have been busy answering questions on what it is, where it comes from and why some people suffer from a lack of it while others have far too much of it.

Why is it, for example, that once we have the basics, that is a roof over our head, food, clothes, a TV, we are still not satisfied? Psychologist and theorist Abraham Maslow, who carried out a lot of research into motivation as far back as the 1940s, came to the conclusion that once we've collected the basics, we set our sights higher. That's when we start craving acknowledgement from our peers, a sense of achievement, and a sense of belonging. It's human nature to strive, and if you stop, you will find yourself in a depressing rut.

The most obvious place one needs to be motivated is, of course, the workplace. Most of us are fairly motivated to succeed at work and do well. But there's a big difference between a person who simply wants to move surely and steadily up the office hierarchy and a person who is a mega-achiever. A research team led by psychology Professor Cary Cooper at UMIST (University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology) found that a large percentage of successful people interviewed had lost a parent, been rejected by a parent or suffered some other tragic loss before the age of eighteen. Cooper claimed that their reason for pursuing success is not to achieve power over others, but to gain control over what is happening in their lives.

Cooper also says that even people who are successful on a more moderate level are usually motivated by a negative happening in their early lives. For example, someone who is very successful at university may well be motivated by teachers having told them that they weren't very good students when they were younger. Of course, success doesn't always come from negativity. Parents who encourage their children without pressuring them can also encourage success, but Cooper believes those cases are rare.

Two major factors that came to light during Cooper's research regarding motivation in the workplace were as follows. The first is autonomy. You have to be trusted in order to get on with your work without having your employer breathing down your neck. The second factor is having a mentor, that is someone higher up in the company, who values you and gives you advice. The bottom line is, unfortunately, that most of us are not sufficiently motivated. line 25 This is quite apparent when you think about New Year's resolutions. Most people make them, but hardly anyone sees them through. If you've made one and you are still managing to keep it, you're doing better than the majority of the population. However, statistically speaking, you are fighting a losing battle, as most people do break them eventually.

Do not despair, though. It's not the end of the world if you suffer from a lack of motivation. Here are a number of tips which are supposed to help boost your level of motivation. Firstly, eat well and exercise. A fat stomach and too much coffee are not going to make you feel very energetic. Secondly, it is a good idea to define what you really want by writing it down. Thirdly, hang around positive people. If the people you spend your free time with are constantly complaining about life, maybe it's time you looked for new companions. If you are doing something you hate, make sure you reward yourself each time you achieve something. Sleep well and take breaks and holidays. Have a life away from your job even if you really like what you do. By putting these ideas into practice, you're bound to enjoy higher levels of motivation and a better quality of life; success is virtually guaranteed.

3. READING

Traveller 6

G. You are going to read a magazine article about literacy. For questions 1-8 choose the correct answer a, b, c or d.

The art of written communication

We learn how to speak long before we can read and write; most people are between six and seven when they first attempt to learn these skills. According to statistics, we have some 4000 words in our vocabulary by the age of six, whereas we can only read about 600. But how do we come to eventually learn how to read and write with reasonable ease?

Learning how to read is a complex process and also one that keeps causing a lot of disagreement among teachers. This is basically due to the fact that there are about nine commonly recognised methods of teaching reading. They include wholeword, whole language, global and 'look-and-say'.

Nowadays, however, most teachers use a combination of these approaches, which can roughly be divided into two main systems. One considers letters to be the units of written language and attempts to teach children to combine speech sounds with graphic symbols (e.g. 'b'-'ball'). The other regards words as the basic unit of language. Regardless of the teaching method teachers apply, one thing is certain: learning how to read and write is easier said than done.

The ability to read and write does not come easily to everyone. There's a small percentage of people who find it very difficult to eventually become fluent readers and writers. And whether we like it or not, it is a tough world for those who are not literate. From shopping lists to legal contracts, reading and writing are at the heart of our society. Research into the field has shown that because society is getting increasingly complex, the need for higher levels of literacy is also increasing. For some people, such as the Japanese, for example, achieving a high level of literacy is like trying to hit a moving target, since they have to master about 2000 symbols.

Still, literacy is a hot topic worldwide. Even today, in some developing countries, around 80% of the population is illiterate. The reasons for this may be social, financial or psychological, and despite the systematic attempts that have been made, the results are not particularly encouraging.

In a world like ours, where the written word seems to have triumphed, literacy seems like a must. On the other hand, though, much communication today works through symbols, not letters.

At any airport, for instance, you'll see mostly symbols aimed at travellers who speak any language. They include the phone symbol or a knife and fork to indicate restaurant services.

Specialists claim that a universal symbolic system of communication may have to be devised to help people understand each other more easily. But can this become a reality? Not really. Such a system will automatically involve excluding all sound from speech, which is impossible. In the future, as in the past, communication will still combine both symbols and sounds.

3. READING

Traveller 6 G. Read the text and decide if the statements 1-8 that follow are True, False or Not Mentioned.

With climate change and pollution causing damage to our fragile environment, individuals and businesses alike have been forced to change their behaviour and adopt new practices in an attempt to preserve our natural heritage. 'Green' is, evidently, the new buzz-word - from hybrid cars to eco-friendly weddings, this new wave of environmental consciousness has affected virtually every sphere of our lives. And nowhere is this shift in attitude more apparent than in the travel industry, where ecotourism has become the fashionable choice for the eco-conscious traveller.

The International Ecotourism Society defines ecotourism as 'responsible travel to natural areas that conserves the environment and improves the well-being of local people'. Essentially, ecotourism involves travelling to unspoiled areas where protected plant and animal species thrive. For the ecotourist, the benefits of such travel are numerous, and include: observing (often endangered) flora and fauna; engaging with locals and learning about local culture, and even offering one's services as a volunteer. Many countries have developed ecotourism projects that rely heavily on volunteer participation, these include: leopard monitoring and research projects in Sri Lanka; reforestation programmes in Ecuador and the various elephant protection projects in Botswana.

Ecotourism, when properly managed, enriches and empowers local communities. The money generated by ecotourism is channelled into the maintenance and development of local infrastructure and is also used to fund conservation initiatives. Ecotourism also creates jobs for locals. In some developing countries, such as Costa Rica, Nepal, Kenya and Ecuador, ecotourism is a thriving industry, and accounts for a large portion of the gross domestic product.

Ecotourism is low-impact, meaning that damage caused to the environment is minimal when compared with regular travel. Certain basic guidelines must be followed, for example, tourists are encouraged to explore their surroundings on foot, rather than by car. As a general rule, ecotourists choose accommodation that makes use of alternative energy sources and they are careful not to waste water and other valuable resources. Tourists are expected to support local industries by purchasing local produce instead of imported goods, and are also required to show respect for local traditions and customs.

Successful ecotourism projects have been launched in a number of countries. In Kenya, for example, the Samburu people have turned more than a million acres of land into a biodiversity conservation zone. Tourists are guided through the area by Samburu tribal warriors, and are afforded the rare opportunity to observe endangered African animals, such as Grevy's Zebra and the reticulated giraffe, in their natural habitat.

Another notable ecotourism destination is the island of Borneo. Rich in flora and fauna, this island has much to offer ecotourists, from rainforests and wetlands to mountain climbing excursions and botanical tours. Borneo is also home to the Sepilok Rehabilitation Centre, which was founded in 1964 to provide medical care for orphaned orang-utans. The Sukau Rainforest Lodge, situated on the banks of the Kinabatangan River, is a firm tourist favourite - this awardwinning eco-lodge is built on stilts and runs entirely on rainwater and solar power.

Though many ecotourism projects have served to benefit local communities and preserve plant and animal species, some ecotourism initiatives do not meet the basic ecotourism requirements. In an attempt to profit from the increasing popularity of 'green travel', some countries have set up controversial ecotourism projects that have violated the rights of the locals and significantly harmed the environment. In these instances, people living in natural areas have been forced to leave their homes without compensation, which has led to clashes over land rights. Attempts have been made to regulate ecotourism, but, until comprehensive legislation is passed, travellers would be wise to research ecotourism projects carefully and ensure that they give their time and money to legitimate initiatives.

3. READING

E. You are going to read an extract from a novel. For questions 1-7 choose the answer a, b, c or d.

It was a freezing cold morning and very damp. The mist lay very thick on the marshes. As I passed the cows, they looked at me as if to say, 'Hello, young thief. That's not your meat-pie is it?'

No matter how fast I went, I couldn't seem to warm my feet. The damp cold was riveted to them the same way the chain was riveted to the leg of the man I was going to meet. I knew my way to the Battery but the mist had tricked me and I had gone too far to the right. Consequently, I had to walk back along the river bank.

I had just crossed the ditch when I saw a man sitting with his arms folded, nodding forward, heavy with sleep. I thought he would be glad to see me with his breakfast, though it was a trifle unexpected. I approached him softly and touched him on the shoulder. He instantly jumped up, and it was not the same man at all. However, this man was dressed in rough grey clothes too and had his legs chained together. He was also lame and everything else the other man was, but when he looked at me, I knew I had made a mistake. He swore at me and weakly attempted to hit me. Then, he disappeared into the mist.

Shortly after that, I arrived at the Battery, and there was the right man waiting for me. He was awfully cold and his eyes looked very hungry. He would have probably eaten the file he had asked for if he hadn't seen my bundle. He began pushing the meat-pie down his throat as if he was storing it somewhere in a violent hurry rather than eating it. He stared at me distrustfully as he gobbled away only stopping to take glugs of water. Then he said suddenly, "You're not planning to trick me, are you? You haven't brought anyone with you, have you?"

"No, sir! No."

"Nor did you let anyone follow you, did you?"

"No."

"Well," he said, "I believe you. You'd be a fierce young boy indeed if at your time of life, you could help to hunt down a pitiful man like me," and then he continued to eat.

I thought for a while and said, "I'm afraid you're not going to leave any of it for him."

"Leave any for him? Who's him?" said my friend stopping in his crunching of pie crust.

"The young man that you spoke of that was hiding with you. Your friend."

He told me with something of a laugh that the young man didn't want any food.

"I thought he looked as if he did," I said. The man stopped eating and looked at me with great surprise.

"Looked? When?" he said.

I told him that I had just seen him wearing the same clothes with his legs chained.

"This man," he said, "did you notice anything about him?"

"He had a badly bruised face," I said remembering what I hardly knew I knew.

"Not here!" exclaimed the man striking his left cheek mercilessly with the flat of his hand. "Yes, there!"

He asked me to give him the file and then to show him where I had seen the other man. I pointed in the direction. At that moment, the man I was with sat on the wet grass and started filing like a madman at his chain. I was very much afraid of him again and so I told him that I had to go. As he was paying no attention to what I said, I decided to slip away. The last I heard of him was when I stopped in the mist and 39 heard the file which was still going.

| Interviewer: | With us today on the show is Professor Jeb      |
|              | Holmes who is going to talk to us about         |
|              | urbanisation or in other words, the making      |
|              | of cities. Welcome, Professor Holmes.           |
| Durf         |   |
| Professor:   | Thank you.                                      |
|              | So, Professor, tell us when did all this begin? |
| Professor:   | With the Romans and the Ancient Greeks, of      |
|              | course. In ancient Greece they had city states  |
|              | which were called 'polis', while the word city  |
|              | actually comes from the Latin word civitas      |
|              |   |
|              | which meant an organised community.             |
| . .   |   |
| Interviewer: | Can you tell us, Professor, what it is that     |
|              | actually makes a city?                          |
| Professor:   | Well, in the old days it was walls and, in      |
|              | fact, in many cities you can still see the      |
|              | ruins of those walls. However, these days,      |
|              | walls don't mean anything. So, how do we        |
|              | define a city these days? That is a very tricky |
|              |   |
|              | question. Do you include all the suburbs or     |
|              | outlying area or do you just include the city   |
|              | centre? For example, depending on which         |
|              | boundaries you use, Tokyo in Japan can have     |
|              | a population ranging from eight million up      |
|              | to forty million. No matter how you define      |
|              | a city, there is no getting away from the fact  |
|              |   |
|              | that cities play a very important part in our   |
|              | lives today and will do in the years that lie   |
|              | ahead. And that leads us to the question of     | what roles modern cities need to fulfil. In an attempt to answer that question very briefly, I would say that first of all a city should cover people's needs as far as accommodation and other basic necessities are concerned. But it is also important that a city should also be able to provide entertainment and other outlets for people to spend their free time constructively. Because, as the old saying goes, 'all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy'. People are much happier and as a result, more motivated and accomplish more when they lead well-rounded lives.

- 1. Nowadays, how can we understand where a city starts and finishes?
- 2. What is the population of Tokyo?
- 3. What's the most important thing a city should provide its inhabitants with?
- 4. Why is it important that people should be able to enjoy their leisure time?

| Now Professor, how about telling us a bit     |
|---|
| about how cities evolved in the first place?  |
| Why not? And of course, I think most of       |
| you probably know that cities have existed    |
| for millennia and their success or lack of    |
| it depended on the civilisation which built   |
| them. The first city civilisations were river |
| valley civilisations and they began over six  |
| thousand years ago. In fact, some of those    | settlements still exist today; for example, Cairo on the Nile in Egypt and Babylon or modern day Baghdad on the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. These forerunners to present day cities were located on fertile plains next to large rivers. They were also in parts of the world with a warm climate. This, in combination with a plentiful supply of water, made it ideal for growing crops and raising animals to provide food for the populations of the first cities. Over time these small settlements grew.

- 5. What ensured an ancient city's success ?
- 6. When were the first cities built ?
- 7. Where were the first cities always located ?

Interviewer: What makes a city continue to grow the way we have seen in recent years?Professor: Cities certainly have grown. You know, two hundred years ago there was only one city in the world with a population of over one million and then just a hundred years ago, there were only three cities with a million plus population. Whereas today, there are almost three hundred. In 1950, fewer than 30% of the people on the planet lived in cities but in the first few years of the twenty first century, urban dwellers outnumber rural ones for the first time in history and by 2025 the inhabitants of our world's cities will number five billion, which means 86% of the entire population. In fact, this move has been called the biggest migration in human history.

- 8. How many cities had a population of over a million one hundred years ago?
- 9. When did city dwellers first outnumber rural dwellers?
- 10. How many people will occupy cities by 2025?

- Speaker 1: I used to play football for a Sunday League team. It was hard getting up in the morning after a night out, but it was only when I stopped playing that I realised the benefits. With no sport in my life, I started feeling tired all the time, and it was affecting my work because I couldn't concentrate. So, I took up tennis and everything changed. My mind became clear again and I was full of energy. It's definitely true that sport is not only about staying physically fit.
- Speaker 2: I work as a graphic designer for a small company. After being there for a couple of years, I seemed to lose my enthusiasm for work and I even started getting into arguments with my colleagues for no reason. To put an end to this negativity, I came up with an idea. I started up a company basketball team. Most people were really enthusiastic and although we aren't very good individually, we came together as a team and played really well. Also, it improved the atmosphere at work so much.
- Speaker 3: I played a lot of sports at school, but the only one I really liked was tennis. I had a great doubles partner, Lee, and we won the school tournament almost every year. Lee wanted to continue playing after we left school but I found it difficult to find the time. In the end, he convinced me to enter a few tournaments with him, but we had to travel to the other end of the country. And when we got there, we'd get beaten heavily. Lee said we needed more practice if we wanted to succeed. He suggested getting up at six in the morning every day! But I just wanted to relax and hang out with friends. It wasn't worth it for me, so I just quit. Lee wasn't happy, but I didn't want tennis to control my life.

- Speaker 4: I have three sons and they all play volleyball. They're quite good and they really enjoy playing, so I don't mind giving them lifts all the time to practice and matches. The thing is, it affects my free time dramatically. I used to love sport, too. Golf was my game. I'd get up early in the morning and play a round of golf before breakfast. Not any more. I'm on such a tight schedule that I had to cut it out. I still need to exercise, so I bought an exercise bike for the garage. It's not as exciting as sport, obviously, but if I haven't got the time, what can I do?
- Speaker 5: Sport is very important to me. I play cricket for a local team. I'm always competitive and I really hate losing. I get that from my father. He sometimes plays for our team when we don't have enough players. He's getting old now, but he can still play. It's very good for him. My eldest son also plays now. He's not quite old enough for the team yet, but he's getting there. I think it's important for teenagers to get involved in sports. It keeps them off the streets and gives their lives some focus.

The world has changed dramatically in the last decade, and, as a consequence, so has the job market. Technological advancements, changes in environmental policies and the global recession have all contributed to the creation of new jobs that didn't exist a few years ago. Brand new job descriptions mean brand new opportunities for job-seekers, and, potentially, greater career fulfilment in the long run.

Let's examine the changes in the media industry first. Social networking sites have changed the way in which we communicate with one another, and they have also changed the way in which companies do business. Many organisations are now using social networking sites to advertise their services and to interact with customers. This has led to the creation of two new jobs in the media industry: social media manager and blogger. Social media managers use social media tools to provide information to customers and promote awareness of a brand. They also keep an eye on social networking sites to track trends and anticipate their customers' future needs and interests. If you are familiar with social media tools, have good communication skills and a marketing background, this could be the job for you.

Bloggers are writers who post their ideas, comments or opinions online on a daily basis. Bloggers either work for themselves, or for large corporations. Companies often employ bloggers to help promote new products or to create an awareness of the company's objectives. Strong writing skills and marketing experience are required for this position.

Rapid technological advancements have also created new job opportunities in the business sector. IT professionals are becoming more specialised; for example, companies are now seeking to employ 'business continuity planners' – these individuals are responsible for creating plans to protect companies from cyber attacks. And there's another interesting business trend worth mentioning: the rise of telecommuters. Telecommuters are people who work for companies from their homes. Much of the work they do is conducted on the phone and on the Internet. Some telecommuters own their own companies, and they call themselves 'virtual business service providers'. They provide large companies with a range of services, including customer service and public relations.

Let's move on to the interactive entertainment industry, specifically video game manufacture. Does the idea of playing video games all day appeal to any of you? Well, you're in luck, because those of you with design and computer skills can now apply for a job as a 'user experience designer'. User experience designers are employed by video game manufacturers to ensure that the video games they produce are easy to use. Essentially, the user experience designer's job is to ensure that the customer enjoys using the games. Nice job, if you can get it!

We're all aware that the recession has had a significant impact on global economies. As a result, more and more people have been forced to tighten their belts and this is actually good news for some entrepreneurs. We've all heard of interior designers, but have you heard of 'interior redesigners'? I see you shaking your heads! Well, interior redesigners are people who redecorate your home using your existing furniture and belongings. Often, they'll move pieces of furniture into different rooms, or give items a fresh coat of paint. It's certainly a cost-effective way to give your home an exciting new look! If you have a flair for design and decorating, this type of work could appeal to you.

Today, I've listed just some of the exciting new job opportunities that have emerged in recent years; there are many more, and it would be worth your while to conduct some of your own research – you might just find the job of your dreams!

- 1. Man 1: Hi Fred, welcome back! How was your holiday? Man 2: It was fantastic, Henry! Sweden is a wonderful place! And the best part was the hotel we stayed in... it was made of ice! Man 1: You stayed at the Ice Hotel? How was it? Cold! The temperature inside the hotel was Man 2:
- minus five degrees, so we had to dress very warmlv!
- Man 1: Minus five degrees? That is cold! I heard that they build the hotel from scratch each winter, is that true?
- Man 2: Yes, it's true. Each November, scores of builders and ice architects work tirelessly to turn tons of ice and snow into a functional hotel. Once the basic structure has been built, ice artists are enlisted to add the finishing touches. The artists are also responsible for crafting the magnificent ice sculptures that are displayed throughout the hotel. Unfortunately, the hotel melts in the spring, and all that hard work disappears in a matter of days.
- Man 1: Well I hope you took some photos!
- Man 2: Of course I did.
- Man 1: So what else did you do while you were in Sweden?
- Man 2: We went cross-country skiing and snowboarding. It was lots of fun!
- It sounds great! Would you mind giving me your Man 1: travel agent's details, Fred? I think it's time to book my next trip!

When the disaster struck, it did so with terrifying swiftness. First came a huge earthquake, followed by a tsunami which engulfed the whole island. Those who survived lived only long enough to witness an even greater horror. Unable to withstand the titanic forces unleashed against it, the island began to break apart and sink beneath the sea.

Such was the fate of the fabled island of Atlantis - at least, according to the Greek philosopher Plato. Even today, almost 2400 years after his retelling of a legend already circulating in Ancient Egypt, the story of Atlantis has lost none of its drama. Yet until recently, few academics regarded it as anything more than a myth.

But now astonishing new evidence is emerging that backs Plato's account. In 2005, the findings of geological studies performed just west of the Straits of Gibraltar - usually taken to be the 'Pillars of Hercules' referred to by Plato - were presented at an international meeting of scientists and historians. They appeared to show that an island did indeed once exist there, and that it was struck by an earthquake and a tsunami at the very time Plato claimed.

The scientists behind the latest discoveries, Dr Marc-André Gutscher of the European Institute for Marine Studies in Plouzané, stresses that there are still many questions to answer. Even so, he says the fit between the ancient legend and the geological reality is striking. To him the occurrence of this type of earthquake and tsunami in the geographic region chosen by Plato for his narrative appears to be more than just lucky. Dr Gutscher's findings are the latest twist in a story that has come full circle, from a supposedly accurate account of a real event, through ridicule and revision and back to respectability again.

Even in Plato's time, the story of Atlantis was regarded as incredible - in every sense of the word. His account of a grand city-state built on an island that met a sudden and terrible end was dismissed as fantasy by some - including his most famous student, Aristotle. But far more have been fascinated by the story, whose roots seem to run very deep indeed. Robert Sarmast, the author of Discovery of Atlantis, and a leading figure in the search for the lost city, says that Plato himself clearly stated that even the Egyptians - who gave the story of Atlantis to the Greeks - did not have the original testimony, and had themselves translated the text to their own tongue from an even earlier, unknown language. Plato dates the events he describes at 'Nine thousand years before Solon', a reference to the ancient Athenian statesman. That places the destruction of Atlantis at around 11,600 years ago - a period before recorded history. Small wonder then, that Plato's description of an advanced race living within a huge metropolis with walls of gold has caused such scepticism. It has also led most serious researchers to the conclusion that some elements of Plato's account - the location of Atlantis, the sophistication of its culture, the date of its destruction - must be wrong.

For centuries, it was Plato's vision of an advanced culture that met a terrible end that proved more compelling to scholars than the precise details of its location. Proposed sites for Atlantis, based on a variety of arguments, stretched across the globe. In 1882, the American statesman and writer Ignatius Donnelly made perhaps the most determined attempt to retain most of the original story by placing Atlantis right in the middle of the Atlantic, its people inventing everything from gunpowder to agriculture.

Such grand claims fascinated the public, but ensured that scholars avoided the subject. That changed in 1939, when the distinguished Greek archaeologist Spyridon Marinatos put forward what until recently was regarded as the most credible explanation for the legend. Marinatos suggested that Atlantis has its origins in a genuine historical event: the destruction of an island in a huge volcanic event that took place long before the time of Plato. Plato's story had been brought into the archaeological mainstream, but only at a price. First, Marinatos proposed that the location of the disaster was Thera - a real island, but one in the Mediterranean, far from the 'Pillars of Hercules'. Second, a great eruption certainly took place there, but about 900 years before the time of Solon, not 9000 as claimed by Plato. Marinatos did give some credibility to the idea of an advanced civilisation being lost in the disaster, by linking the Thera eruption to the destruction of the famous Minoan civilisation on nearby Crete.

The Thera theory met a mixed response. Some archaeologists claimed that features of Atlantis mentioned by Plato coincide with those now attributed to the Minoans. But attempts to explain away the huge difference between Plato's chronology and the destruction of Thera have won few supporters.

However, the idea that Atlantis was in the Mediterranean still has its adherents. Since the 1990s, Robert Sarmast has argued for Atlantis having been located around 80km south-east of Cyprus, until its destruction during the flooding of the Mediterranean basin around 12,000 years ago. In 2004, he released images of curious structures found by his expeditions at a depth of 1500 metres. He believes that these images show what are the oldest man-made structures ever seen by human eyes.

Sarmast is the first to admit there are many gaps in his theory. Geologists insist the Mediterranean basin has been flooded for over five million years, and that the 'manmade structures' are entirely natural. Even so, Sarmast hopes to have compelling evidence in the near future.... (fadeout)
